WASHINGTON CITY:

MONDAY ........... November 11, 1872. The I esson of the Great Fires. The two great fires, that at Chicago and Boston, teach a lesson that should have results in bringing about a better system of dealing with fires and a safer mode of constructing buildings in cities. It has been demonstrated that stone walls are even more dangerous than wood, as the heated parts expand and crumble and throw down the entire structure; that brick is the near est a fire-proof material available; that the mansard roofs as they are constructed in this country, mainly of wood, and with sheathings of highly inflammable material, are perfect "tinder-boxes"; that our present fire apparatus is not capable of dealing with fires on high mansard roofs; that the water thrown fails to reach the highest points in sufficient volume to effect anything serviceable, but absolutely does damage as it i well known that a sprinkling of water serves only to add fuel (oxygen) to the flames. The inventive minds of the country should be applied to the task of devising some means of taking the engine pipes up to a height, through the aid of movable towers or something of the sort so as to pour a volume of water directly upon the flames. At present, as above stated, the water either goes over the burning house; falls on it only in a sprinkle that adds force to the flames; or falls short, altogether.

An ingenious invention made by Chief Engineer Cronin, of our Fire Department, deserves attention in this direction, and may perhaps supply the great need. It consists of a Y shaped tube, the branches of which are screwed upon two engines, and both engines work through one vent with very nearly double power. This invention was tested, it will be remembered, before the Japanese embassy at the Arlington Hotel, and threw water in volume over that building, which is five stories high, surmounted by a mansard roof. It Boston, at the very start of the fire, the firemen were unable to reach the flames on the roofs of the taller buildings, and the fire leapt from one roof to another, and soon got irrepressible headway.

Washington city has more reason than ever to congratulate itself on the great width of its streets, which not only make it the best ventilated city in the country or the world, but which also renders it the least liable to suffer a wide-spread conflagration such as has visited Boston and Chicago,

The Dead Hero of Gettysburg. An eye witness of the battle of Gettysburg

has some very distinct recollections of the late Major General George Gordon Meade in connection with that momentous conflict. Called from the position of a corps commander to command one hundred thousand troops only three days before he met the hosts of Lee on the beights of Gettysburg, his soldierly intellect grasped the necessities of the situation at a glance, and without an hour's delay the several columns of the grand old Army of the Potomac moved forward by different routes from Fredcrick towards the Pennsylvania line. Three days after, on the 1st of July, 1863, the column in advance, under General Reynolds, struck the enemy just south of Gettysburg. The subsequent ambuscade of our advance guard and the death of General Reynolds are matters of history. On the day following, the 2d of July, the enemy massed on the right of their line and hurled themselves with wild impetuosity against General Sickles' 3d corps on our left, with what result history also tells. The following day, the 3d, however, witnessed the last and most desperate effort of General Lee and what was really the great battle of Gettysburg, which for obvious reasons was the decisive conflict of the war. A single mistake on the part of the commanding geaeral of the Army of the Potomac, a single error of judgment in the disposition of his troops, and history would probably have recorded our defeat at Gettysburg; the invasion of the north by the army of Virginia, and the failure of the attempt to save the Union. The demeanor of Gen. Meade, however, was calm and soldierlike. He slept but a few minutes on the night of the 3d of July for he knew that the great struggle was to come on the morrow, and he could not rest until every disposition to meet the enemy had been made. Having placed his army in an almost impregnable position along Gettysburg heights he waited the coming onslaught. At one o'clock on the afternoon of the 3d of July a single signal gun sounded from the confederate lines across the beautiful valley, and General Meade was in the saddle at once for he well knew its meaning. An interval of three or four seconds only elapsed and two hundred confederate cannon belched forth their deadly messengers and the peaceful hills trembled as from an earthquake shock. During the whole of this terrible contest the valor displayed by Gen? Meade was of the most lofty and daring kind. Mounted on a powerful horse and with sword unsheathed he rode along Gen. Hancock's line where the battle raged wildest, giving orders as calmly as if on a dress parade. The air around him was literally white with smoke puffs from bursting shell, and minnie balls whistled as thick as hail. Through all he preserved an unimpassioned demeanor, save when some recreant soldier or officer broke from the Union lines and ran towards the rear. Where so momentous a stake was depending on the result, he could not calmly witness such exhibitions of cowardice, and, plunging spurs in his charger, he would dash after them with drawn sword, and, checking them in their career, would excitedly ask for some evidence of wounds. If the latter could be shown he allowed the men to go the rear; but if not, he drove back the dastards at the point of his sword, and forced them to resume their places beside their braver comrades. To the provost guards stretched behind our battle line he gave the most imperative orders. " If stragglers can't show their wounds shoot them; cowards must be made to fight." The result of this was that there were but few stragglers, and probably more discipline and order were noticeable at Gettysburg than on any other battle-field of the war. Several times did our lines waver and fall back before the impetuous charges of the en my; but Gen. Meade was always present in yerson, cheering on the blue coats and entreating them to repel the assaults and regain their for mer position. The bard fought field was won, and to Gen. Meade was mainly due the credit el saving the country from a defeat, which would dubtless have been full of disastrous conse-The citizens of Boston have ever been foremost in extending relief by fire, flood, or famine throughout the world, and now that such a terrible calamity has overtaken that city, every American community should promptly respond to an appeal for aid for her houseless families turned into the streets at the threshold of a New England winter. Her enterprising busines men with their accustomed vigor and courage. will soon go to work to repair the losses as far may be, but they will want help to do that, and to care of the poor and suffering. Relief meetings are being held in other sections and Washington should not be behind in the good work. Let our public spirited citizens take steps to hold a meeting at once. Now is the time. A dollar to-day or to-morrow will do more good than five next week.

MARN IT UNANIMOUS .- In view of Grant's jmmense majorities, Griswold, of the Cincinnati Saturday Night, suggests to Greeley that, following the example often set in nominating conventions by a defeated candidate, when the other man comes out far ahead, he should now move that the American people make the election of Ulysses S. Grant unanimous.

We will thank the enterprising cableist on the other side not to send us any more about that intolerable flag-parading bore, Sergeant Bates. If he will forward us authentic information of Bates' timely end through softening of the brain, spentaneous combustion, or any other likely cause we will cheerfully print it-not otherwise.

It is the easiest thing in the world to lose the blessing of health, but when lost it is not so easy to regain it. The popular idea of fifty years ago that a tremendous scouring of the bowels was an essential element of cure in almost all diseases has fortunately for mankind been pretty effectually exploded. The introduction of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, nearly a quarter of a century ago, may be said to have given the coup de grace to drastic purgation. The world has learned from the beneficial effects produced by that admirable preparation, that one medicine may embrace the three properties of a tonic, a laxative, and an alterative; that the three curative processes of invigoration, purification and regulation may be compassed at the same time by the operation of a single agreeable remedy. There are sound, philosophical reasons for the remarkable improvement which the Bitters occasion in the condition of a deranged and enfeebled system.
This pure combination of vegetable juices not only strengthens the stomach, stimulates the appetite and braces the nerves, but also imparts tone and vigor to the secretory organs-as the skin, the live. and the kidneys; - and if the blood has become too thin and watery to nourish the body properly, enriches and vitalizes that "raw material" of all the solid portions of the frame. At this period of the year, when intermittent fevers, bilious disorders, stemach complaints, and dysenteric and diarrhesic ailments are always more or less rife, occasional doses of the Bitters will be found the best safeguard against the atmospheric conditions which generate them, An accession of general vigor is necessary to enable the system to resi-t the morbid influence of the malarious vapors which rise from the earth at this season, and of all the known invigorants, Hostetter's Bitters is the safest and the most potent.
